Generation 8 (con't)

Notes for Willemijntje Margrieta Kok:

Willemijntje, or Wilma as she was called, came to America with her first son Johannes several years after her husband, Willem van de Graaf. Willem worked for his cousin to earn the passage fare for his wife and son to join him. When they arrived in New York, they were helped by the Travelers Aid organization who arranged for a place for them to stay and to eat. The room where they stayed was full of bedbugs so Wilma and her son did not get a lot of sleep. For their first dinner in America they were served something she found shocking because in the Netherlands it would only be fed to the hogs. Her son convinced her it must be acceptable to eat it and so she had her first taste of corn on the cob. Because they did not speak any English, they had notes pinned to their clothes telling where they were to go by train to meet Willem. They rode the train to Kalamazoo, Michigan where he picked them up in a motor car, which may have been their first ride in a car.

During World War II, Willem and Wilma moved to Detroit where Willem worked in a defense plant and Wilma later opened a rooming house on Parker Avenue which she operated for many years. Called the "Parker Club" it catered to young professionals, secretaries, dental students, etc. The house could handle over 20 "roomers", some with private rooms, some with doubles, and some with larger dormitory type arrangements. Breakfast and dinner were served six days a week, and Willem and Wilma lived in a separate area on the first floor in a suite of two rooms.
